Class of 1964

Class Agent

Gentlemen of the Class of 1964:

My friend Bill Moore, class of '42, tells the story that when he was a senior in high school, his father, a DePauw graduate, took him to visit three schools. Kenyon was not a good fit. After they visited Washington and Lee, his father said there too many oriental carpets on the floors. After an interview with President Hopkins and Dean Trippet, Bill and his father decided on Wabash. Bill and I suspect that Wabash was always his father's goal. It was not only Wabash's academic rigor that he respected but that he felt Wabash - an all men's school - would toughen him up a bit. I thought of this story after Skip related David Kendall's remark about Oxford needing a little Wabash obscenity.

In the first decades of the last century Wabash faced tough times. President Burroughs had resigned, convinced that the school was committing suicide by not going co-ed. Enrollment was at its lowest since the Civil War. The school was getting a reputation for rowdiness and struggling for academic respectability. The entire class of 1902 had been suspended. But it was also an era that initiated or reaffirmed many of the traditions that still resonate in the minds and spirits of Wabash students, alums, and even faculty members.

The school color had been fixed at a meeting in 1886. After someone had proposed heliotrope, Billy Martin, captain of the football team, rose and gave voice to what would become our proprietary cheer, "Heliotrope, Hell! We want blood!" But it was Francis Cayou who first called his 1904 football team the "Little Giants" at a time when Wabash met the likes of Indiana, Purdue, Notre Dame, Michigan, etc., on the football field. (Check this site for a picture of those Little Giants: <http://blogs.wabash.edu/dear-old-wabash/2008/10/31/the-originals-of-1904/>.) In the same era Ralph Jones's basketball teams played sixty-nine games and won sixty-six against the same competition and won the national championship in 1906. Old Wabash became part of Wabash lore and in 1908 The Bachelor became the student voice of the college. In the 1920s the student body had earned the eponymous label "Hell Roarin 500." Ed Zeigner '10 coined our motto "Wabash Always Fights" in 1919 for a speech delivered by Rome "Ike" Williams '06, a member of the original Little Giant football team of 1904. It was also the era in which three Wabash students won Rhodes scholarships: James I. Osborne in 1906, Claude Pifer in 1907, and Norman M. Littell in 1921. They were soon followed by Byron Trippet in 1930 – all Betas, by the way. It was the best of times, it was the worst of times – if you will pardon my plagiarism.

The ol' Wabash spirit in the 1920s

In a 1952 Chapel speech Dean Byron Trippet reflected on the impact that Frances Cayou had on the shaping of Wabash tradition.

But in his four years here Wabash athletic teams wrote an amazing and spectacular chapter in the history of the college. They and their whole student generation left a legend which was to become in fact a vital part of the character of Wabash in the twentieth century. It is a legend which has had a great deal to do with the essential virility of Wabash as a college for men. It has had a lot to do with our educational philosophy. It is what Deans Kendall and Dr. Roller had in mind when in rewriting the aims of the college last year they emphasized the educational importance of a "robust environment." It has made our alumni fiercely possessive about their alma mater and has given them attitudes which have caused our friends from neighboring colleges sometimes to regard us as proud and cocky. It has left us student and alumni problems which have repeatedly taxed the patience and tact of the faculty and the administration but which nonetheless reflect an important source of our strength. (Italics are mine.)

The Wabash of our day is no longer. It is a more polished, sophisticated campus now. Bill Moore '42 says he prefers a Wabash with some rough edges. I agree, but I do believe that spirit born of the "robust environment" that has always set apart Wabash is still alive. It affects (or infects) us all, even the professors.

In a 1973 Sports Illustrated article John Underwood reported how he taunted two publicists and a professor:

"There it is—you're jealous of DePauw," I said. I was nursing coffee in the offices of the Wabash news bureau with Director of Public Affairs Jim Wood and Sports Information Director Gerry Dreyer, trying to find a good reason for being there on such a lousy day. The wooden floors smelled deliciously of age, and on the wall was a laminated plaque announcing the 1907 Michigan game ("Yea! Wabash! Big Mass Meeting of Townspeople...The Biggest Athletic Event Ever Pulled Off in the State...).

"Of course we are," said a third man, a professor whom Wood had invited in to set me straight on DePauw. His name was Warren Shearer, onetime acting dean of men, a whip-lean man with aggressive eyebrows that bounced when he was hard into a story. Wood goaded him on. Shearer's dramatic voice rose.

"But venturing out for companionship never bothered a Wabash man," he said. By the same token, he said he had noticed over the years a marked deterioration in the vigor of the DePauw people. They had become "more placid," and their professors were hopeless. When emotion ran amuck on the field or in the stands at the big game, it was always the Wabash professors who sallied forth to save the peace. "The DePauw professors," he sneered, "just sat in their seats with their arms crossed."

The article is done with Underwood's tongue planted firmly in his cheek and worth a look:
<http://sportsillustrated.cnn.com/vault/article/magazine/MAG1087757/3/index.htm>.

Not surprisingly, Dean Moore has on more than one occasion contributed to the "robust environment." In January 1977 Crawfordsville and much of the Midwest was hit by a particularly bitter winter storm with temperatures well below zero. When asked if Wabash might cancel registration and classes due to the bad weather, Dean Moore replied, "This isn't a boys' school, this is a MEN'S school!!" The Bachelor reported that registration went smoothly.

We may no longer meet Purdue and Notre Dame on the football arena, but we do manage to compete in other ways. Tom Runge reports these numbers on recent One Day Giving Challenges:

A couple of numbers to think about:

- a. Notre Dame Day - April 28 - 4,000 donors. Student population - approx. 12,000 (13 times bigger than Wabash)
- b. Purdue Day - April 30 - 7,400 donors. Student population - approx. 39,000 (43 times bigger than Wabash)
- c. Wabash Day - April 30 - 2,085 donors. Student population - 900. (LITTLE GIANTS IN EVERY RESPECT!)

Pictured above are the medallions for the attendees of our 50th reunion. Registered attendees will receive them at the dinner on Friday night. Be sure you sign the registration book when you pick up your reunion packet.

A few days ago I was talking with Stan Sibell about the procrastination of our classmates in officially registering for the reunion. Stan replied that he thought it was not so much procrastination as an innate resistance to authority. Gentlemen, it is now time to put that resistance aside and register.

One of the best-expressed statements of this resistance to authority appeared in an editorial in the September 18, 1928, issue of The Bachelor. When Louis Hopkins became the seventh president of Wabash in 1926, he initiated a number of changes to the athletic and academic life of the college. He also attempted to rein in the "Hell Roarin' 500." Not all of these changes were met with enthusiasm.

But recently there has come up another matter which threatens the very core of Wabash spirit and should cause a crimson fog to blur the sight of every loyal student. It is the proposed removal of all freshman discipline, on the campus and in the fraternity houses. In keeping with the administration's effort to make us more like the boys at Dartmouth comes this impending blow to the very thing which has for many years distinguished Wabash as "The Caveman School," the "Hell-Roarin' 500" and the school that "Always Fights." The fact remains, however, that if Wabash students allow their freshman discipline to go, that spirit which is compulsory manifested in the first year and later sincerely made a part of the individual will become even as that of Butler, or DePauw, or some of the other educational institutions which have trouble getting a respectably big crowd out to a home football game.

And as for the fraternities—God help them!—With practically all the freshmen on the campus organized every year, the race will go to the most luxurious entertainer. The badge, unearned by any hardship (no rough week, of course, could exist under the conditions of the proposed plan), would have much the same significance as a button denoting membership in a boarding club. - H. MILES - Editor

As of today, forty-two of us had officially registered for the reunion. Listed below are those who have committed to attending the reunion. There are still some Betas, Phi Deltas, Sigma Chis, Phi Kappa Psis, and Independents to be heard from. If you would particularly like to see some of the undecided members at the reunion, call them and encourage them to attend.

Old Wabash

From the hills of Maine to the western plain, Or where the cotton is blowing;
From the gloomy shade of the northern pine, To the light of the southern seas;
There's a name held dear and a color we cheer, Wherever we find it glowing
And the tears will rise to our longing eyes, As it floats on the evening breeze.

When the day is done and the western sun Is painting in flashing glory
Across the skies with gorgeous dyes, The Color we love so well,
We love to sit as the shadows flit, And praise it in song and story,
We love to shout as the light dies out, A good old Wabash yell.

REFRAIN

Our Prayers are always thine, Our voices and hearts combine
To sing thy praise when future days Shall bring thy name before us.
When college days are past, As long as life shall last,
Our greatest joy will be to shout the chorus.

CHORUS

Dear Old Wabash, thy loyal sons shall ever love thee,
And o'er thy classic halls, the scarlet flag shall proudly flash;
Long in our hearts we'll bear the sweetest mem'ries of thee,
Long shall we sing thy praises, Old Wabash.

And loud and long shall echo the song, Till hill and valley are ringing
And spread the fame of her honored, name, Wherever the breezes blow.
Till sweet and clear the world shall hear, The sons of Wabash singing,
And flying free the world shall see, Our scarlet banner go.
The honors won by each loyal son, In highest rank shall instate her.
Forever more as in days of yore Their deeds be noble and grand.
Then once again ye Wabash men, Three cheers for Alma Mater
What e'er befall, revered by all, May she unequaled stand.

Alma Mater

Dear Alma Mater at thy shrine of cherished memory,
The hosts of Wabash meet to pledge undying loyalty.
Within these sacred portals thy fires shall brightly flame
And herald our devotion to thy most honored name.

These fleeting years we tarry here beneath the Scarlet sway
Beguile us with their subtle charms, then quickly steal away.
Do thou, our Alma Mater, turn back the hands of time
Give us this joy forever and keep our faith sublime.

Dear Alma Mater, in thy hands rest all our hopes and fears,
Thou Counsellor in College days-thou guide in riper years.
Grant now thy benediction; vouchsafe thy care benign,
That worthy, we may follow the precepts that are thine.
