*"I've seen all good people turn their heads
each day. So satisfied I'm on my way."*

THE YES ALBUM, 1971

This morning, as I was staining the small deck on my big house for the final time (Kathy and I have the place up for sale) I hit the "'70s Rock" channel on my Amazon Music App and traveled back in time 40-some odd years during the task.

It reminded me of great sunny spring days in Crawfordsville, and great times we had during our learning experience there. The more I think about it, the more and more I realize just how impactful and powerful Wabash's influence has been on my life. Nothing except an outstanding liberal arts education would have prepared me for a mid-life career change which happened in my late '40s. Some of you have had similar experiences.

Below is a story about a recent Wabash grad who's now making impactful movies which are drawing rave reviews. The movie is "Love After Love," and (by the way) see it when it comes to your town or burb. But the point – again – is how Wabash prepared this alumnus for such an amazing future. (Suppose having Andie MacDowell practice a nude scene with you isn't all that bad either.)

Soon you'll see information about Wabash Day of Giving 2018. It's a day when the college asks its Loyal Sons to give back ... just a little or a lot, as part of your regular philanthropic giving or as a one-time thing. When you see the info about Wabash Day of Giving, take about eight minutes (that's all it took me last year) to go online and make a contribution to our Alma Mater. Thanks!

Your Classmate for Wabash,

John
