My good gentlemen,

Procrastinate with me for just a few minutes and read the nonsense I need to discuss with you all. I hope I find you all well as I'm sure you are scrolling through Instagram feeling bad about how you didn't get up at 5 am to workout, unless of course you're Eddie Cmehil. Speaking of, kudos to you on hitting 345 on power clean this morning. If you also do not have time to go to the gym, but enjoy the mirror neuron stimulus you should follow @dopefit_317 to see the Cmehil clan killing it. As you can tell my graduate school ventures are ever exciting and take up all my time, however I am glad to take time out of my busy day of science to reach out to you all and potentially entice you to come fraternize with me in the near future.

I was reminiscing about spring break a few weeks ago, because I saw on Snapchat that Pickles, Mac and all the senior Sigma Chis booked the same hotel in Fort Lauderdale that we were in last year. It made me extremely excited to see everyone from Wabash again and I was able to catch up with a few people over my spring break (of course the spring break where I don't weigh 290 pounds is the one I didn't go to the beach.) However, I was fortunate enough to see Scott Purucker over break for his birthday lunch/start of March madness/my hangover cure from St. Patty's Day along with a fraction of our pledge class. Scott is currently working for Eli Lilly and I'm pretty sure he has gone to like 4 continents or something since he started working there. One day Scott said he was going to be in Malayasia and then when we met up he was talking about how he just got back from somewhere else. I think Scott must be selling Lilly event mugs in bulk on the side and/or he is conning Lilly into sending him around the globe before he runs for Mayor or something. Honestly though Scott is killing it, he bought a house near Broad Ripple after graduation and is living the dream.

Having seen some of the pledge class over break got me thinking about seeing everyone else at some point soon. It has come to my attention that the Big Bash reunion weekend isn't just for reunion specific class years but rather a reunion that every alumnus is invited to. So I expect every person that can come to mark your calendars and clear your schedule for June 2-4. I'm so committed to this that if 80 % of you donate on the day of giving (stay tuned for the date) I will buy a keg for one of the days we are there, maybe two. I'm not asking for much on the donation (you can spare 5 bucks), but please don't let Rezek and his class beat us. I really like the idea of us donating more than them and him being super annoyed by that. The Big Bash is the first weekend in June so let's get rowdy. I'm excited to hear from a lot of you guys. If anyone would be interested in making a larger contribution towards a challenge of some sort please contact me and Patrick as we intend on also having a more significant challenge for our class. Sidebar I saw that Star Wars next non-episode movie might be about a young yoda and that sounds awesome. Don't have a source for you, but I don't have the time to write you a report about it.

Stay Schwifty,

Jake Norley
